

How to Increase Charges for AE Without Losing Clients

Discover 3 simple but effective pricing plans that allow bureaus to offer auto enrolment as a chargeable and profitable service.

Practical Auto Enrolment Pricing Strategies

The price that a bureau will set for processing auto enrolment (AE) is an important business decision. Unlike the introduction of RTI, bureaus now find themselves in a situation where they can financially benefit from auto enrolment by offering it as a chargeable service to their clients. With the added workload required to process AE, it is inevitable that clients should expect to pay more for the extra work provided.

However, finding the right pricing strategy will be a key factor to increasing profits. If the price is set too high, clients may go elsewhere. If the price is set too low, the opportunity to increase revenue may be missed. Fundamentally, the price a bureau charges will need to cover any additional investment in software and additional hours involved in processing AE.

The dilemma of how much to charge your payroll clients for the additional AE work is fast becoming a hot topic! There seems to be a certain degree of secrecy surrounding the pricing as nobody is quite sure how to charge. One critical issue is to make sure that the pricing strategy allows the bureau to be profitable. While there is no magical formula to achieve this, we will examine three unique pricing strategies that are both practical and realistic.

1. Tiered Pricing Strategy

Definition: A tiered strategy is where a bureau can provide AE services at different price points for different levels of service.

A very simple example of a tiered structure would be shipping costs where a customer has the option to pay for items to be delivered in 1-2 days, 5-7 days or 7-14 days at different price points. The tiered strategy method clearly outlines the value and price differences between different levels of service, so it can make sense to both the bureau and their clients.

A good tiered strategy needs a structure that ensures no tier is too heavy or too light on the service offerings. If the option to upgrade is simple and straightforward, clients will be more inclined to upgrade. This strategy also means that clients can find a price point that will suit their budget.

Below we will look at an example of a tiered pricing strategy for a client that has 10 employees. These prices are in addition to normal payroll charges. It will also be possible to create various tiered packages with different price points depending on the number of employees your client has and whether there are different pay frequencies. This example is not definitive and is open to amendment.

Another option could be to remove the postponement and declaration of compliance options to charge as a one-off service / task in addition to the chosen tiered structure.

2. Monthly Retainer Fee

Definition: A monthly retainer fee is an agreed amount to be paid on a monthly basis for completion of an agreed set of tasks. Typically, it is a contract for which the client will pay for the required AE services.

Some bureaus have decided to simply increase the monthly charge for processing their payroll plus auto enrolment. Rather than charging a high price for auto enrolment setup initially, a monthly payment will spread the cost of auto enrolment over a period of time.

By charging per month, a bureau can also include the continuing AE tasks, such as the ongoing employee assessment each pay period and submission of files to the pension provider. A retainer approach is an opportunity to calculate how much revenue will be made from a particular client each month, allowing for a consistent revenue stream. This pricing strategy will allow for an incremental increase in income as each client reaches their staging date.

This pricing structure will appeal to clients as it guarantees that the bureau will carry out specific AE tasks on their behalf each month in a manageable way. The client will understand from the outset what the payroll and AE costs will be, permitting them to budget accordingly. The time associated with ongoing AE tasks should be minimal each month due to software automation of AE duties. The processing time will be further reduced with the introduction of integrated or API services between payroll and pension providers.

3. Price List Strategy

Definition: A price list or menu is a simple way to present a list of services. It is another way to break down each AE process into bite-sized pieces for your clients.

Some bureaus may decide that they only want to handle the AE tasks that are seamlessly handled by their payroll software. A price list approach will demonstrate exactly what the bureau is offering as a chargeable service.

Cost itemisation is useful in justifying the price charged for AE. If clients see that an activity-based costing structure is being used, they can begin to understand each component of the process. It will be important to complete some price comparisons and establish the reasons for the variation in prices for different services.

With this strategy, there is also an option to offer bundle deals, for example if the client buys more than five tasks or services. A lot of phone and broadband companies use this quite effectively to promote their TV, broadband and phone services.

For the client, the advantage of a price list structure allows them to measure progress of the project. Clients will have a better understanding of the cost and resources required to comply with AE.

This method works by breaking down each element of AE in a way that helps organise and define the total work scope of the project. Listing each of the automatic enrolment tasks on a price list will simplify the client's understanding of the AE services offered and make it easier for them to make their selections.

Conclusion

A clear pricing structure will allow any bureau to accurately cost and schedule the work involved for each client. The advantages of each of these different pricing strategies will ultimately put the control into the hands of the clients. By identifying clear deliverables, the bureau can establish clarity for the client while effectively increasing profits for the firm.

The client can then decide which of the tasks they want to outsource and which of the tasks that they would like to process themselves. By explaining AE costs as a quantifiable structure, clients can then begin to understand the complexities of the duties involved in AE. All of the work can be clearly planned and identified at a set price as agreed by both parties.

The objective for payroll bureaus is undoubtedly to increase revenue from auto enrolment. Bureaus need to avoid increasing their own business costs or overheads to prevent operational losses. Whatever pricing strategy is chosen, all AE processes will need to be streamlined. Should additional software charges be incurred for AE functionality, any increase in price will reduce any profit.

Auto enrolment is a function that should be included in the cost of payroll software. AE is only representing an opportunity for bureaus when there are no additional operational costs for AE automation. The bottom line is that payroll software should seamlessly handle all AE tasks, regardless of how many employees the client has.

Key Take Aways

- Communication - Let your clients know that you are open for business. Make sure they have an understanding of AE and what it means for their business. No matter how dismissive your client may be with regard to auto enrolment, it is up to you to inform them that you are offering AE services.
- AE Consultation - Set up consultation meetings with your clients to discuss the auto enrolment challenge. Bureaus can charge a nominal fee for these consultations. These meetings allow you to discuss what AE services you are offering and provide an explanation of the pricing structure.
- Pre-Assessment Report - Create an overview report of what AE will look like for your client at the time of staging. Send your client the report prior to staging, which should include each employee's worker category, details of the pensionable pay, qualifying earnings and pension scheme contribution amounts for each employee. This tool should be available free of charge in good payroll software systems. PDF Example: Pre-assessment Report. This will also identify cases where pension scheme registration prior to staging is NOT required.
- Payroll Software - Make sure there are no additional charges for using the auto enrolment features in your payroll software. If you use software that includes unlimited employees, unlimited employers and free AE functionality you will maximise your profits. Read: 10 Pitfalls When Choosing Software for Auto Enrolment.
- Automation - If you can increase the rate at which auto enrolment is processed, you will automatically increase your profitability. Use payroll software, such as BrightPay that can automate and streamline these auto enrolment tasks. Batch processing enrolment and communication letters will offer massive advantages.
- Realistic Prices - Keep your prices as realistic as possible. Take into account your direct costs, expenses and resources. Ensure you account for your own time when carrying out the additional AE work.
